

I strongly oppose the weakening of the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. Nothing is more disruptive to my day than having someone phone during the business day with an unsolicited call. My phone services are for the use of my clients (I am a licensed mental health counselor) and for the use of my business. I contact anyone with whom I want to do business; anything else is an interruption and an abuse of my time. This includes "anyone with whom I have a relationship", such as banking establishments. If I want their services, I know how to contact them.
